My name is Polina and I have <sup>the</sup> ~~a~~ best pet in the world - dog called Bob. He has white and brown fur and big funny ears. Bob is two years old and all my family and friends love him <sup>very much</sup>.

One Sunday, three years ago I and all my family was gone to our relatives, so Bob stayed in isolation all alone. We were having fun with our friends, but Bob was very bored at home.

We have very beautiful pictures on the walls in a hall. They were painted by me and my sister when we were younger. Bob decided to play with them. In spite of the fact pictures were on the walls, he took them down and started to have fun.

When we went back we saw very-very interesting view: Sad Bob was sitting on the floor next to the pieces of my remarkable pictures. He looks regretted about his behavior, but I was sad about my drawings. Moreover, mum made me tidy up this great mess. However, I didn't punish my dog. Finally, he is still my best pet. Bob is clumsy and noisy, but still very useful.

WRITING

All the world's a stage, and all the men & women are mere players

/think it's all about lifetimes. We are playing characters, like in theater. You can play everyone you want if you know how. William Shakespeare is a poet. He knows everything about theater. And he finds it very similar to real life.

The world's a stage. Everyone can play everyone. You can play poor and you will be poor. If you play rich you will be rich. It's all about characters.

You can change characters, but you can't change actor, yourself.

Your character is like your outfit. You can put it off and wear another, but you can't put it off yourself. A lot of old poems and poems tell us about it, but in different way. Just read "Euphony Design"

In this story, author tells about main character Euphony. He had more too holes because of rich life and all of these fake people. There they are just playing characters, and suddenly forget about their real face.

This phrase is deep. I enjoy thinking about it a lot.

But I might be too young to understand all of it's meaning.

It's like in theater, everyone has his own place on stage.

Everyone does his own work. Someone is a president, someone is a priest.

Playing characters means you can't jump higher, you can't be

Every human has a shadow. It means he is below the stage.

How will have no money, no friends.

This phrase has very deep meaning. Everyone gets it in his own way. I get it like this. I might be too young to understand full meaning, but I enjoyed thinking about it.

WRITING

I think <sup>t</sup>his Shakespeare's quote means people are actors that are playing only one role. — themselves

Actors are people who get to play other role, the role of a living or already not living person, or even a role of an imaginary humanoid creature. These roles are living by a scenario

Normal people on the other hand are playing only one role, as I already said, and their scenario is wrote throughout the life. Some points of this scenario are repeating day by day, like going to work and from work, or <sup>the</sup> holiday episodes,  $\Sigma$  But the details are always different. Today you're working all day, but tomorrow power goes off so the working day is shorten. ~~On the~~ One christmas you're celebrate with your parents and other you don't because you're <sup>in</sup> in the other city.

So, we're not completely actors, but we have much in common like the scenario or role. So while William Shakespeare is ~~wrote~~ right by saying:

"All the world's a stage, and all the men and women are merely players", by saying "merely" he tells that he understand that people and actors are not completely identical. That means that my understanding of his words.

WRITING

I understand William Shakespeare's words as all people have their fate, and they can just "play their roles"

I think the author is wrong. In my opinion everyone decides and builds their life and fate with own hands. If you want to become someone special and useful, you need to work hard and it does not depend on anything or anybody. We make decisions and get consequences, from that we become who we are.

There are many examples when people became popular, famous and rich because it was their goal and they worked hard for it, but not because they are lucky. The most important that we should believe in ourselves and know what do we want. One of such examples is my aunt. She used to work in police, but one day she decided that she does not like her job and she needs immediately change her life, then she left police, despite the fact that she worked there more ~~that~~ than 10 years. She found what she was looking for, and what is main she enjoys her job everyday.

As a conclusion I can say that I believe - people are makers of their life, and noone can bother or distract them.

WRITING

I think authors wanted to say that all humanity has no will and everything about our lives is obvious, our fate has decided how every human must live act. That's how Shakespeare thinks. But I can't agree with him. Everyone can create his own life play and do anything he want. People just need to find their own way. It's not fatally, if you something went wrong, because you can change things you don't like. That's all. Life isn't simple, but you should try I can prove it. In Evangelion by Hideaki Anno we can see examples of meaning ourself choices in fate. Shinji is the main character of the story. He afraid to try being closer to other people, because his father acts like that, and his son thought that he needs to be a person like his dad, his life can't be rewritten. But when Shinji met people who love him, he understood that he <sup>was</sup> deeply mistaken in lie all his childhood. That's how love can change the way you live.

In conclusion I want to say that everyone can have his own opinion about life, fate, love and death. Many poets, writers, scientists and philosophers were arguing about these things. And there is no person who can completely explain how everything works. (And maybe someone believed) In Shakespeare's tragedies readers can see his point of view, but will they follow him if their own choice. "Be or not to be." is the question that everyone must to answer.

WRITING

It so happened that the societies we are living in has some rules which people follow. How we behave, what we say is basically an acting. While people make their way from an infant to an elderly man, their behaviour and outlook on life change. In other words, they take up different roles.

Personally, I fully agree with the authors statement. Indeed, we start our lives by playing a role of a naive inexperienced kid. As we grow older, we finish school, then start working. At this point, our actions often become dramatically different in comparison to the ones of our previous stages of life.

To give you an example, let's take a look at the Jack London's novel "Martin Eden". In the beginning of the narration the main character is introduced to us. Martin was a sailor, who had been invited for dinner at a rich aristocratic house. He behaved rude, knew nothing about good manners. It was extremely hard for him to fit in the society he had got into. However, being obsessed with learning, he managed to become a writer. As he evolved intellectually and mentally, Martin started to live a completely new life. The role, he was playing, had changed. Martin got the ability to behave as he used to do with his old friends, while being able to act polite as well.

In the conclusion, I would like to say that if all the men and women are players, they should master their acting role, otherwise, act the way they want.
